Suan Sunandha Rajabhat University (SSRU)

Suan Sunandha Rajabhat University (SSRU) which located in Bangkok, Thailand was graciously named by King Rama V as was once a part of the Dusit Palace, "Suan Sunandha". Later, The Suan Sunandha Vitthayalai School was established in 1937 by the Ministry of Education and upgraded to Suan Sunandha Teachers College in 1958. At present, SSRU offers undergraduate programs, graduate programs, and doctoral degree programs to full and part-time students and covers more than 80 fields of study for students. SSRU also has the International College and Management College, which offer various programs.

As nature of the university from the establishment, the faculty of Education keeps the leading role among all fields of study and offers the diversified majors such as: Mathematics, Thai, English, General Science, Educational Innovation and Technology, Social Student, Early Childhood Education with all three academic levels from Bachelor's, Master's and Doctoral degree.

Since 2005, the university has expanded its academic cooperation with many organizations which included both government agencies and private business to develop personnel and students. SSRU also collaborates academically with many universities in Asia, Europe, America, and Australia. For example, two-degree Programs with Yunnan Normal University have been organized and we cooperate academically with: Tin Jin Normal University (China), Tin Jin Chinese Traditional Medicine University (China), Vietnam Teacher's Training (Vietnam), Cambodia Cultural University (Cambodia), Tokyo Education University (Japan) Wolverhampton University (England) Edith Cowan University (Australia), Deakin University (Australia), Rutgers University (USA), Indiana State University (USA), California State University at Fullerton (USA) and Cesar-Ritz Institute (Switzerland) .
